Red Cross Workers Told of Role in Cuba Ransom

Responsibility of Red Cross in the Bay of Pigs prisoner release, which concluded recently when the final boat load of supplies leaves the United States for Cuba, was discussed by the featured speaker at the Los Angeles Red Cross chapter annual meeting.

In his address, Ramone S. Eaton, vice president of American National Red Cross, Washington, D. C., said his work in directing the Red Cross part in the supply operation which resulted in the release of the Bay of Pigs prisoners.

Eaton says the final shipment will fulfill the $53 million commitment negotiated with Cuba.

Eaton pointed out that the Cuban supply operation added a new dimension to the international role of Red Cross.

"In this case Red Cross played a large part in the prevention of disaster and suffering — it entered the picture before the fact rather than after the fact," pointed out Eaton who is responsible for Red Cross international relations and public relations.

He said Red Cross participation in the Cuban crisis pointed up the unique values of the organization.

Because Red Cross cuts across many segments of both U. S. and Cuban society, it was possible to mobilize people in many walks of life to get the task accomplished.

Eaton's speech preceded the chapter's annual business meeting when officers and members of the board of directors were elected.

Daniel J. Haughton, president of Lockheed Aircraft Corp., was named to succeed John M. Rely, as chairman of the Los Angeles Red Cross chapter

For the past two years Haughton has served as chairman of the Red Cross blood program for Los Angeles and Orange counties. The 300 persons in attendance at the luncheon meeting, held at the Ambassador Hotel, included representatives from each of the Red Cross branch organizations, including Torrance, as well as the Los Angeles chapter-at-large.
